

<http://www.edhtelegraph.com/articles/2008/02/06/opinion/letters/02letters.txt>

Tigers thrive, survive in USA

Tuesday, February 5, 2008

In response to last week's letter "Another vote for closing zoos," Tigers are going extinct in the wild, so I see it as a good thing many live and survive in Texas.

That means they can be saved in captivity in the USA, since the USA is one of the few countries wealthy enough that it can afford to save these magnificent animals from total extinction.

As for the tiger hunting ranches, they are illegal in every US state. Every time I ask the people who claim they exist to name at least one so we can report them, they can not deliver any answers, cannot name even one place that does it.

If the writer of your letter, or the source of her claim, PAWS sanctuary, knows of such places, they should report them right away or else they are helping the criminal activity to continue.

Zuzana Kukol

Henderson, Nev.