According to information on the Meijer website, for each person that enters the contest, Meijer would donate $1, up to a maximum of $5,000, to the HSUS Foreclosure Pets Fund.

So what is this HSUS foreclosure fund?

HSUS, a non profit charity with over 200 million in assets, just created a whopping $15,000 money fund to supposedly help shelters with the local surge in homeless pets due to foreclosures. To apply for HSUS's grant, shelters have to jump thru few hoops. Once you get to the application, you find out that the maximum amount a shelter can request is meekly $2,000.

Considering HSUS's questionable tactics of raising funds and using them for certain purpose, such as Katrina and Vicks pit bulls, why would any animal lover donate to them, the 'middle man'?

If HSUS truly cares about animals, they would want shelters to get the money ASAP and would advise public to do it the fastest and most efficient way, donate directly to the local shelters, no middle man needed.

Some of the most recent and notable HSUS endorsed fiascos, money raising schemes and harmful regulations:

- Money raised in the wake of hurricane Katrina and subsequent investigation
 by Louisiana Attorney General involving funds raised for reuniting pets and their owners
- Soliciting money to care for Vick's pit bulls, even though they never had possession of any of them
- Endorsing the Captive Wildlife Safety Act, that makes it a felony for animal owners of certain exotic species to take their beloved pets across the state
 - lines with them for any reason, not even in case of a household move, visit to
